SCORP COIN ( ASC ) WHITEPAPER

SCORP COIN (ASC) is a peer-to-peer (one-to-one) electronic currency

What is peer to peer?

The concept of peer-to-peer network

Simply put, a peer-to-peer system is a network of computers that follow a distributed structure and are connected to each other via the Internet. Assets and currencies are shared between these computers without the need for a central server. In fact, any computer on a peer-to-peer network is both a server and a User

An example of a peer-to-peer network

A computer needs the Internet and software to connect to a peer-to-peer network. Once connected, the network lets you search for the public information of others who share, and lets others search for the public files on your computer that you shared. In fact, users do not have access to all of your computer files. Instead, they only access files that you have placed and shared in a special folder on your computer
